

YOUR ENTREPRENEURIAL TYPE	THE GOOD	THE BAD	YOUR HIDDEN POWER
The ADVENTURER is the entrepreneur with a 1001 ideas, with more failures than successes under her or his belt, but with a strong belief to keep going; there is always a next opportunity...	You are never short of ideas, you see opportunities in everything... & you don't have to follow the latest hype to get inspired... nor do you need external validation of your idea...	At times when the going gets tough, you find it easier to abandon ship and follow your next shiny idea to get started with. TIP: commit to improving and making what you have work better instead of restarting anew.	You have a great willingness and capacity to LEARN NEW THINGS .
The INNOVATOR is a dreamer at the same time... she or he has big dreams to conquer the world or change humanity... they think they are larger than life... and they often are!	You see opportunities in another dimension to other people: you make connections that other people don't make and you are able to inspire people with your idea and have them work with you as part of something bigger.	You find it difficult to know when to stop, you miss the red flags that further pursuit of your idea will not get you very much further. TIP: keep a constant eye on your budget to find out if you can still make things work...	"Yes, but..." is not something that is featured in your vocabulary... on the contrary: if other people deem something to be impossible, it triggers even more ENERGY in you to pursue your idea.
The BOOTSTRAPPER is the entrepreneur who slowly but steady works on their one project... growing it step by step... being very focused... not trailing off-track...	You don't risk to fall in the trap to hold off on implementing your idea while waiting for everything else to fall in place. You understand that the best way to move forward is to learn by doing.	You have your two feet so well rooted in reality that you risk losing sight of your big dream by staying within your comfort zone. TIP: if something scares you, that is most likely where growth and opportunity is for you.	You are very good in CONNECTING WITH PEOPLE and making relationships work for you, for example by exchanging goods for services or have customers fund your products or growth before production.
The EMPLOYEE TURNED ENTREPRENEUR knows their strength and waits for the right opportunity to present itself to be able to run with it... they grow from experience and knowledge...	You are not easily brought down by adversaries. Over the course of your years in employment you will have dealt with many situations which you now can refer to as "experience" to help you tackle up and coming issues.	"Been there, done that." You easily see many bears on the road before even getting started. TIP: everyone time, every situation is different, so don't hold back and refrain from trying things over again...	You have a great TOOLBOX at hand containing all tricks and answers to any type of situation that may arise. As a bonus, you can rely on your GUT FEELING which effectively is your optimized experiences...
